The All-Steel Motor Car Company offices are being fitted up at the factory building in Macon this week. Mr. Fred V. L. Smith, treasurer of the company, is here superintending the work. The factory was equipped with magnificent offices. When Col. Blees operated it he had a private room handsomely furnished, adjoining the main office rooms. His apartment was equipped with rich oriental rugs and carpets, fine mahogany furniture, statues, costly engravings and the most beautiful articles that money could buy. Despite the luxury with which he was surrounded Col. Blees was one of the most democratic of men. Anybody could enter his office without knocking and the most obscure citizen would be treated with that same fine courtesy that he might extend to the greatest of men. It is the wish of Fred V. L. Smith, the treasurer, and his co-directors that a Macon man be selected for the presidency in the place of General E. J. Spencer, who recently resigned.
